STONE ISLAND | PORTER

STONE ISLAND AND PORTER PARTNER FOR THE 7TH TIME, CREATING BAGS,
AND, FOR THE FIRST TIME TOGETHER, APPAREL.

A. G. COOK WEARS THE COLLECTION AS PART OF THE GLOBAL CAMPAIGN.

November 14th, 2025 - To celebrate the 90th anniversary of YOSHIDA Co., STONE ISLAND and the iconic Japanese brand PORTER, known for their high quality, durable bags, reunite after 5 years to launch a special capsule collection, continuing a legacy of shared innovation and craftsmanship, now extended for the first time to apparel alongside accessories.

As part of Stone Island's official campaign 'Community as a Form of Research', influential British musician and producer A. G. Cook wears pieces from the collaboration, captured by David Sims.

The collaboration centres on six limited-edition pieces - a short parka, cargo pants, a backpack, a helmet bag, a cross-body bag, and a pouch - all crafted in made in Japan nylon twill, and characterised by a distinctive artisanal corrosion process, making each piece unique and unrepeatable.

Inspired by the emblematic Corrosion Treatment - a cornerstone of the STONE ISLAND AW '025 - '026 collection and a reflection of the brand's ongoing commitment to research and experimentation - the pieces fuse this advanced textile innovation with PORTER's recognisable fabrics and linings, as well as functional detailing such as tape reinforcement, adjustable padded shoulder straps, multiple front pockets with zip and loops. The result is a capsule that celebrates both brands' material obsession and design ethos.

The corrosion effect is achieved through a manual spraying technique that gives each item its own worn, gradient appearance. Once the desired finish is reached, garments are washed to fix the effect, preserving the result while ensuring durability.

The hooded parka is padded with two distinct layers: the first bonded directly to the outer shell, and the second quilted into a multi-axial pattern on the inside - adding structure and warmth while highlighting the depth of the treated fabric.

STONE ISLAND and PORTER will also open a dedicated pop-up store at DAIROKKAN, on the first floor of Shibuya PARCO, from November 14th to 30th, 2025. Visitors will be able to experience the full capsule firsthand in a space that embodies the essence of the collaboration. At the heart of the space is a tent-like installation constructed using PORTER's notorious 3 layered bonding fabric, transforming the environment into a tactile experience. A. G. Cook has also curated a custom playlist for the pop-up space, blurring the lines between product and sound.

The STONE ISLAND | PORTER collaboration will also be available from November 14th in selected STONE ISLAND and PORTER stores, and online on the brands' official websites.

Hooded parka made from blue nylon twill and padded with two layers of wadding: the first bonded to the outer layer, and the second quilted in a multi-axial pattern to the lining. The finished garment undergoes an innovative corrosion treatment on nylon, reflecting Stone Island's ongoing commitment to research and experimentation. The corrosive solution is sprayed manually through an artisanal process, making each piece unique and unrepeatable. The corroded areas take on a worn appearance, creating a gradient effect. The garment is then washed to halt the corrosion process and treated with a specific anti-drop agent.
